

MY INTERNSHIP EXPERIENCE

Delali Adiamah

July/August 2015

Working with UNIC Accra has been one invaluable experience for me. Talk about inspiration, motivation, determination, education and adventure—I personally ensured I benefited from these. I had many opportunities to improve my professional writing skills, create a Facebook Page for the Center, pay attention to details, develop creative activities for events and build a strong team spirit with fellow interns. My task as an intern was not redundant. I was involved in diverse and meaningful activities; ranging from behind the desk tasks to field outreaches. I had the opportunity to attend conferences, wrote reports and news stories on events, and participated in the planning process of outreaches and the celebration of various UN Days. I can attest that the works of UNIC Accra is truly contributive to the promotion of a well-educated and informed Ghanaian community, media and institutions on the objectives of the United Nations.

I also enjoyed the opportunity to interact with other UN agency staff members and learned a great deal about the UN System and the various ways agencies cooperated with each other. I was exceptionally inspired and motivated by my experienced supervisor, her ability to speak confidently no matter how great or small the crowd present.

The humility and openness of staff to the concerns and opinions of interns was pleasing. I remember very well the words of my supervisor during my Skype interview for the internship. She stressed on the strong interpersonal relationship that existed at UNIC Accra and I really cherished this feature during my internship. I personally value a family-oriented organization and I am glad I enjoyed this quality at UNIC Accra.

To gain a prestigious opportunity for personal and professional development as one with United Nations Information Center is second to none. I wish nothing but the best for UNIC Accra as it executes its goals of richly informing and educating the Ghanaian community and contributes to the success of a strong and happy world.
